If you have an older model from the 20 or 21 series, use these other steps below. The easiest way is to compare yours with these images. No need to mess with any other remotes or fiddle with your devices. We like to keep it simple around here. If your remote is model 40.0, which lacks a Home button, press the Menu button once instead.

Of the choices, the wizard is the easiest because it guides you through the process. It's important that you choose the right brand because the process the pairing wizard walks you through involves testing pairing codes, and these are different for each brand. Follow the onscreen instructions to test each code. For most devices, this involves pressing either the Volume or Power buttons on the DISH remote to see if anything happens. If the code works, select Finish on the screen. If it doesn't, select Try Next Code and repeat the process. This is especially true if your device has a lot of unique or specialized features. Test your remote now so you know it'll work in the middle of the big game or a tense movie scene. Just repeat the above process for all the devices you want to pair with your remote. If you do encounter a problem, you can run through the process again and try a different code. Here are the steps for programming an older DISH remote control using the power scan After about 10 seconds, you should see all four Mode buttons light up. When they do, release the button and it will start blinking. The blinking Mode button should now be a solid light. This means the DISH remote is ready to program. Once the device has turned off, you know you've found the right code. The Mode button should blink several times. Now you want to test the remote control to make sure everything works as expected. Better to test it now than to find out something isn't working in the middle of your favorite sitcom. You're all set. Repeat this process for any other devices you want to program to your DISH remote, and you're good to go. The exact location of the button depends on the model you have, but it's in one of these two places. The system info screen should disappear from your TV—this lets you know the pairing process worked.

To relink your DISH remote to your receiver, Press SAT on your remote and then press SYSTEM INFO on the receiver and then finally press SAT again on your remote. You can always try your luck by visiting DISH's customer support page and asking for a replacement. His work has been published on a variety of sites around the web. Sep 18, 2020 Sep 15, 2020.
