An image that has or appears to have height, width and depth is three-dimensional (or 3-D). An image that has height and width but no depth is two-dimensional (or 2-D). Some images are 2-D on purpose. Think of the international symbols that indicate which door leads to a bathroom, for example. Symbols shall be designed in such a way that they can be recognised at a glance. This is why they use only the most basic forms. Additional information about the symbols might try to tell you what kind of clothes the ásmall man or woman wears, the color of their hair, they arrive at the gym on a regular basis, and so on, but all this extra information tends to make it take longer to get the basic information from the symbol: which bathroom it is. This is one of the basic differences between how 2-D and 3-D graphics are used: 2-D graphics are good for communicating something simple, very quickly. 3-D graphics tell a more complicated story, but it needs to bring much more information to do so. For example, triangles have three lines and three angles - everything you need to tell the story of a triangle. A pyramid, however, is a 3D structure with four triangular sides. Note that it takes five lines and six corners to tell the story of a pyramid - almost twice the information needed to tell the story of a triangle. For hundreds of years, artists have known some of the tricks that can make an apartment, 2 -D Painting looks like a window into the real and 3-D world. You can see some of these on a photograph that you could scan and display on your computer monitor: objects appear smaller when they are further away; When the objects near the camera are in focus, the objects farther away are blurred; Colors tend to be less vibrant as they move further. When we talk about 3-D graphics on computers today, though, we're not talking about pictures anyway - we're talking about moving pictures. If making a 2-D image into a 3-D image requires you to add a lot of information, then moving from a 3-D image to moving realistically requires a lot more. Part of the problem is we didn't run into it. We expect a high degree of realism in everything we see. In the mid-70s, a game like "Pong" could impress people with its graphics on the screen. Today, we compare game screens to DVD movies and you want the games to be as smooth and detailed as what we see in movies. This poses a challenge for 3-D graphics on PCs, Macintoshes, and, increasingly, game consoles like the Dreamcast and the PlayStation II. She was diagnosed on 1 August 2014 and died on 17 February 2015. She's been diagnosed with a small lung cancer. I took care of all her meds, medical appointments. I also helped to walk and make meals. When he started chemo, he had a hard time walking and sometimes he would fall. I slept on her couch so I could see in her bedroom in case she fell out of bed. I helped her toilets and wash her car when she started falling. Even though we had some tough days, I am so grateful for the time I was able to spend with her! In February 2018 he was diagnosed with the age of 32 with the stage's lung cancer due to a genomic mutation, while 33 weeks pregnant with our second child. I felt like I was struck by a lot of bricks, one day at the top of the world and then incredulous and overwhelming pain. Here I was an apparently healthy individual, who evaluated fitness, clean life and healthy food, diagnosed with more deadly cancer. Fortunately, I was seen at the University of the Colorado Anschutz Cancer Center of one of the main thoracic oncologists of the world, Dr Ross Camidge. Following biomarker tests, a relatively new diagnostic tool that identified the specific cancer type and directs treatment, I was found to have a form of lung cancer called a positive Alk. I was quickly worn a targeted drug that appeared initially effectively, but in a few months it was found ineffective against some of the tumor cells. Radiation, chemotherapy and more radiation followed. I took a decision to give up my work as a digital marketing director for Humana to focus on the care of my children and my health. During those months, two significant things happened. First of all, my family and I dedicate ourselves to raising awareness of this deadly disease and struggled to raise research funds. In September 2018, I participated in Biomarker of Lungavity Testing Social Media Campaign to educate patients and doctors on the importance of biomarker tests. In September, I also drove a golf tournament, links to the lungs, held in Denver, CO, which collected $ 130,000. $ 100,000 was given to the Colorado Colorado Politic University of Colorado Colorado and $ 30,000 to our partner, The Chris Draft Family Foundation. The second significant event was the growth of my cancer cells in the laboratory to Cu, part of the research that allows personalized treatment, rather than a generic approach to treatment. In December a second mutation was identified and I started taking a further targeted drug, with the hope that it will bear the second mutation. Scans in February and March have revealed a reduction in tumor cells and in May, the words I had had To listen to 15 months, "no active disease at this time." I learned a lot in the last year and a half; My family and I found the strength we had no idea that we had, nourished by the support from friends and family of type, compassionate and exceptionally generous. Moreover, the relationships I developed with others like me with this disease have become priceless. There have been many difficult days, but my optimism and hope arise from my determination to see my daughter, paige and son, Brady meets many milestones, as well as the belief that lung cancer will become a chronic disease rather than a death sentence one day.
