CC0 / IgorovSyannykov / Pixabay Photo courtesy: image / Getty images images There are thousands of plant species known to science, which means it is almost impossible to memorize them all. So what do you do when you're out in the world and see a plant you want to know d the most? Even the most qualified gardener or the wild Explorer may have trouble identifying a unique plant - at least, until now. Fortunately, there are several mobile apps that can help you identify virtually any plant species that you can find. The apps, available for both Android and iOS users, can recognize different types of trees, flowers, vegetables, edible and medicinal plants, aquarium and pond plants, weeds, mushrooms, wild flowers, indoor plants and others. If you find a plant that leaves you puzzled, download one of these apps to help you in your identification search. You can spend hours scroll with Google images or websites trying to find an online system that matches what you found. Instead of playing this guideline game, try downloading Leafsnap, which is free for iOS and Android devices. This app can help you instantly identify thousands of plants, flowers, fruit and trees with advanced artificial intelligence integrated into the software. Photo courtesy: Dulyanut SWDP / Getty Images Everything that you have to take a photo of the plant in question and the app goes to work, identifying the species in its plant database and providing informationWhat is it? After the app scans a photo, list the possible matches. You can then select the plant that you think is the most similar to what you found. The user-friendly app recognizes 90% of all plant species known worldwide, making it simple to find out what you're looking at (and a little more about it). It is a free app, but it shows ads. As with most mobile apps, you can pay a premium version that removes ads, and this is the only difference between free and premium versions of Leafsnap. Plantnet is similar to Leafsnap in this takes a photo of a plant as part of the identification process, and the app can then quickly tell you the name from its database of over 20,000 different species. The free iOS and Android App evaluates a plant based on leaves, flowers, fruit, bark and surrounding habitats. Photo courtesy: Marko Geber / DigitalVision / Getty Images Once you have taken a photo The app displays potential matches and you can choose from the list of options before making your decision on which plant you found. The app is constantly growing and expanding its database, but keep in mind that it focuses more on identifying the wildflower than to help you identify common plant houses, trees, herbs and vegetables. The FREE app also has a factsheets links on different plants, a map that you can develop based on your observations and information about the family or the family of identified species. Through the app, you can share your comments with other users. In addition, the app lets you know the possible flora in your surrounding location so you can go out and search for unique plants yourself. The iOS and Android Inaturalist app is the best app for scientists and naturalists who focus on plant research, and aims to promote a community where botans and people interested in biodiversity can share and discuss their observations. In addition, the free app offers high-quality academic information for scientists who are working hard to preserve nature. Developed through a collaboration between the California Academy of Sciences and National Geographic, the app helps users learn plant names from photos, but also provides information on the purpose of each plant. courtesy photo: Cavan Images / Getty Images As a user, you can write your comments and share them in the Community. In return, other scientists can help provide more information to help you identify plants. Community members have the opportunity to follow public projects and interact with scientists from around the world. If you are a naturalist, this is the best app to assist your research because it gives you access to a team of scientists whojust as curious and motivated to find answers like you. Flora Incognita helps iOS and Android users accurately identify fast plants. As a competitor app, take a photo of the plant plant To identify, and almost instantly, the app provides what it considers the best results based on the features it sees in the photo. But in addition to this, the app displays extensive information on plant toxicity, status and protection distribution. It has an advanced search option so you can add more details to find the plant you discovered. You can also create observation lists based on your discoveries. Complimentary photo: Lucy Lambriex / DigitalVision / Getty Images There is a disadvantage of this app: designed to identify wild plants in central Europe, so it may not help everyone around the world. He also did not win users who hope to identify plants in their home gardens and around their homes. On the other hand, it is a completely free app without advertising, and adds millions of images to its artificial intelligence system, so it is possible that the app will expand in other areas in the future. SmartPlant is a free app for Android and iOS users who, like most in this list, uses photos to help you identify plants. However, instead of taking a photo and allowing the App to "read" and determining the plant name, click a photo of your mystery plant and use the app to send it to a team of experts who identify the plant for you. You can generally get results within 24 hours and you also have the ability to chat with the team of experts. To use this app, you will need credits. The free version provides a credit per month, but the paid option of the app offers you unlimited credits. Complimentary photo: John Slater / Getty Images In addition, you can add plants you discovered in a "digital deficiencies calendar", which is ideal for collecting apartment plants and other species in your outdoor garden. This tool sends you notifications about how to take care of your plants, monitors progress and tells you when it is time to follow certain assistance steps. As an additional bonus, SmartPlant experts can also identify parasites in your garden. This is by far the most focused app on customer support for users - almost like having a plant doctor on the speed dial. compose.
