Our ancestors have devised a series of methods to preserve the Vedas not written in their original form, to preserve their tonal and verbal purity. They have established rules to ensure that a syllable in the song has not been changed, not a reply has been altered. In this way they ensured that the full benefits were derived from mantra intonation. They have set the time necessary to pronounce each syllable of a word and called this unit is time or interval of time "mature" "out", how we must regulate our breathing to produce the desired vibration in a particular part of our body so that the sound of the syllable enunciated is produced in its pure form: also this is determined in the Vedanga called Siksa. The similarities and differences between the verse of music and the Vedas are treated. So those differences between the sounds expressed by birds and animals on the one hand and Vedic summits on the other. With all this the right way is shown for the intonation of Vedic mantras. A remarkable method has been devised to ensure that words and syllables are not altered. According to this the words of a mantra are united in different models such as "vakyam", "pada", "krama", "jata", "mala", "sikha", "reki", "dhvaja", "danda", "ratha", "ghana". We call some Vedic scholars "ghanaapathins," don't we? It means they learned the song of scripture until the advanced stage called "ghana", "Pathin" and so on intonation is nothing less than majestic, rather divine. The main purpose of such methods, as already said, is to ensure that not a single syllable of a mantra is altered in the slightest. They are woven together, so to speak, and recited back and forth. In "vakyapatha" and "samhitapatha" the mantras are sung in the original (natural) order without a special pattern adopted in the vakyapatha some words of the mantras are omitted and then it is called "sandhi". There are also "Krama" Tamil, but in English the words are not joined together. You have some examples of sandhi in Tevarai. Thiruvachaka, Tirukkural, Divya Prabandham and other works of Tamil. Because of one reason, the individual words are less recognizable in Sandhi than in Tamil. In Krama the each word in a mantra is clearly separated from the next. It comes close to samhitapatha after this one joins the first word of the mantra to the second, and then to the third, and so on. In this way the whole mantra is sung, going back and forth. In six khaspathas the pattern consists of three words of the Tamil country, instead of the two of jata. Chana patha is harder than these. There are four types to this method. Here also the words of a mantra are sung back and forth and there is a system of permeation and combination in the chanting. To explain everything would be like conducting an arithmetic class. We take every precaution in the lab, don't we, to protect a life-saving drug? The sound of the Vedas. The world against all Mali. Our ancestors have devised these methods of singing to protect the sound of our writing against change and distortion. Samhitapatha and Padapatha are called "prakrtipatha" (natural way of singing) as the words are read only once and in their natural order. The other methods belong to the "Vikrtipatha" category (artificial way of singing). (In Krama, although the words do not go into the strict natural order of one-two-three, there is no reversal of the words; the first after the second, the second after the third, and so on. So we cannot describe completely like Vikrtipatha). Leaving via Krama, there are eight Vikrti models and they are told in verses to be easily remembered. Jata Mala Sikha Rekha Dhvaja giving Rath Chana Ityastau-vikrtayah Proktah Kramapurva Maharsibhish All these different singing methods are designed to guarantee tonal purity and verbal verbal for all times. In Pada the words in their natural order, in Krama two words together, in jata the words going back and forth. The words count in all these methods of singing and there is the certainty that the original form will not be changed. The advantages to derive from the different ways of singing are given in this regard. SAMHITAPATHAMATRENA Yatphalam prycyata budhah padu tu dvigunam vidyat krama tu ca caturgumam varnakrame satagunam jatayantu sahasrakam considering that our ancestors have taken so much care to make sure the sound of the Veda has not suffered minimal change, it is useless for modern researchers to look for To establish the date of our writings discovering how the sounds of his words have changed.
