same purpose, it is just called in a different way. Ireland uses the Eircode (like a postcode) which is specific to Ireland. Eircodes in Ireland are unique in a way that they indicate the exact address of the individual or company, down to the level of the street number. The Irish postcodes have 7 characters and are alphanumeric, meaning that they include both numbers and letters. When formatting the Dublin postcodes, the most important is that they have two parts: Routing Key marks a wider geographic location within Dublin. Postbox Eircodes were introduced in 2015 and they serve as postcodes or zip codes in Ireland. Eircode is unique in its way as it identifies the exact location of an individual or companys address in Ireland. In most countries, postal codes only identify a small commune within a city/town, but in Ireland, the Eircodes specifies the individuals exact address. If you are looking for the zip code format in Ireland, you have to check the format of the Eircodes. An Eircode has two parts, a Routing Key and a Unique Identifier. It is alphanumeric, and consists of 7 characters, including both numbers and letter. The first part of an Eircode is the Routing Key. The Routing Key defines the postal area where the mail is sent to within Ireland. E.g. V94 for Limerick, H91 for Galway, T12 and T23 for Cork, and F94 for Donegal. The second part of the Eircode is unique in this sense, that it defines down to the exact house number of an address.
For example, V94 AKN3 is the postcode for 7 Bridge Street, Limerick, Ireland. V94 is the Routing Key that marks the city of Limerick, and AKN3 is the Unique Identifier that specifies the exact address (including house number) within the town/city. ever tried to send mail overseas, whether it be to the United Kingdom, Paris, or even Estonia, figuring out the correct address formatting and postcode system can be tricky. Ive sent mail overseas everywhere from Ireland to Japan and even Mongolia and have had both great and terrible experiences doing so. But, Ireland in particular can be a very difficult one to get right! Thats why Im sharing with you all of the information youll need for identifying the correct Dublin postcode and ensuring your letter or package delivered. Lets get started! Dublin postal codes have a more complex structure compared to other countries, but I promise, theyre fairly easy to understand once you know how they work. This is where I made a big mistake when sending a letter to a friend in Ireland, and I never saw it again nor did they! So, pay attention to the format below. Ireland uses the Eircode as its national postcode system which consists of seven characters, with the first three characters representing a routing key and the last four characters representing a unique identifier for each address within that routing key area. Dublin postal codes are structured as follows. Ive chosen the Guinness Storehouse to use as an example. The first three characters represent the postal district (e.g. Dublin 8 or D08) The last four characters are made up of numbers and letters specific to an address. The Guinness Storehouse has an exact address of St. Jamess Gate, Dublin 8, D08 VF8H, Ireland with D08 being the routing key and VF8H being the unique identifier. You can find the correct unique identifier for your address using Irelands Eircode System. The proper way to format a Dublin address is as follows: [Recipients Name and Business Name if applicable] these can go on two separate lines [House Number] [Street Name] [Dublin Postal District Code] [Du

 Ireland, but they are known as Eircodes. Introduced in 2015, Eircodes are seven-character alpha-numeric codes assigned to every individual address in Ireland, making them more precise than traditional postcodes. They consist of a three-character routing key which designates the general area or postal district, followed by a four-character unique identifier for a specific building or entrance. As I mentioned before, these Eircodes are often referred to as such or as postal codes, and are rarely, if ever, called zip codes are often used to distinguish telephone calls made to different regions. For instance, in the US, you might dial 212 for New York City, or 617 for Boston. In Ireland, however, there are no specific area codes for Dublin. The entire country of Ireland, you can simply use the Eircode Finder. Just enter the address in the search bar, and the districts in 1857,[5] and Liverpool, the first city in Britain or Ireland to have postcodes, from 1864. The letter "D" was assigned to designate Dublin[6] and was retained by the new Irish government.[5]Dublin didn't start using postal district numbers until 1927[7]:371 when the Department of Posts and Telegraphs initiated a scheme that requested senders to add a code to each addressed in English senders were to add an appropriate postman's walk number but when addressed in English but S3 on Irish addressed mail.[8] This scheme was not popular and within a few years became defunct. In 1961, new postal district numbers started and these numbers were added to street signs only displayed the street name in Irish and English. The number of districts increased as the city grew, and in the 1970s, large districts were subdivided. Dublin 5 was split, with the coastal part retaining the "5" and the inland part becoming Dublin 10, along with Palmerstown and Chapelizod. However, Dublin 10 was subsequently split again, with Palmerstown and Chapelizod forming Dublin 10, along with Palmerstown and Chapelizod. Kimmage and Terenure becoming part of a new district in order to facilitate the processing of mail by a new delivery office for those areas. Residents of some areas objected to the assignation of the next available number, "Dublin 26", for the new postal district, citing property devaluation: the higher numbered districts typically represented less affluent and less central areas.[10] An Post ultimately relented, and the western part of the district number Historically, the postal district appeared with one or two digits (or in the case of one district, a digit and a letter) at are used for addresses on the Northside of the River Liffey, while even numbers are on addresses on the Southside. Exceptions to this are the Phoenix Park (along with a small area between the Park and Dublin 8 and

Routing areas of County Dublin after the implementation of EircodeThese areas do not fall inside the historic Dublin postal districts and their postal routing keys came about through the new Eircode system. This is because many of these suburbs and towns fell outside the purview of Dublin city in the past. Today, they form part of "A" and "K" Dublin Eircode areas. There are 12 of these districts in total. Notable locales include Blackrock, Dn Laoghaire, Malahide, Swords, most of Lucan, Rush and Balbriggan. While a small part of Bray lies in Dn LaoghaireRathdown, for mailing purposes, the entirety of Bray is in County Wicklow's A98 routing area. Main article: Postal addresses in the Republic of Ireland EircodeSuccessive Ministers for Communications since 2013, Minister for Communications, Energy and Natural Resources, Pat Rabbitte announced a postcode system for the entire country.[17] This came into effect during 2015 and gave an individual post code for relevant addresses, forming part of the routing code, the first three characters of the code. For example, a code for an address in Dublin 1 would start with D01, followed by four characters, hence Dublin D01 B2CD.[18]The districts are sometimes used in a manner similar to the sub-districts of the London postal district whereby they replace a placename. A property might be described as being "in D4", for example.[19] This public awareness of Dublin postal districts allows occasional use in marketing. Dublin n is usually abbreviated to Dn, with examples including the "D7 RestaurantRepublic of Ireland postal addressesList of
