do NOT need to be licensed. There is no governing agency over online preschools, so there is no license required, there is no license required either. ANYONE can start an online preschools. Daycares have to be licensed if they care for a certain number of children, so that's why everyone asks if preschools also need to be licensed. Let's be clear: there is no such thing as a "preschool license." Rather, IF you need to be licensed, you will need to get "daycare license" from your state. In this situation, you would get LICENSED as a daycare and you would OPERATE as a preschool (i.e. you would choose to only teach children ages 3-5 and only be open for a few hours each day.) You MIGHT need to be licensed in your state. Every state has a certain # of children you can teach at any one time without needing to be licensed You need to check the guidelines for your state (see below) to find out: • How many students can you teach by yourself WITH being licensed? • What is the staff to child ratio for preschoolers? Your state's preschool license requirements will apply to anytime you are teaching a group of 3-5-year-old children, the licensing requirements apply (unless specifically stated otherwise for your state.) If you are only teaching school age children, like in an afterschool program for example, then you DO NOT need to be licensed. Look over your state's requirements to see how many children you can teach at one time without a license. The ratios will be different in that case because of the school age factor. If you're operating out of your home and you choose to be licensed, you'll want to contact your city's Planning & Zoning department to ask if you need a special use permit. Ask them: "I'm starting a preschool (not a daycare) in my home. I'll be getting licensed as a daycare, but I'm a preschool so I'll ONLY teach children ages 3-5, and I'll ONLY teach for a few hours each day. Do I need a special use permit or any other type of permit?" That question should get you to the right person in order to proceed with the correct process. Remember to emphasize that you are getting licensed as a DAYCARE - if they try to put you into the SCHOOL category, you'll have a much more difficult time, and you don't belong in that category. (Again, there is no PRESCHOOL category; you're lumped into the "daycare" category.) You may also want to check with your city government offices to see if you will need a business license or any other permits. Also, set up a Doing Business As (DBA) through the Secretary of State's office in your state and consider registering as an LLC through your state's Corporation Commission. You need 35 sq. ft. per child. The fire marshal will measure the total square feet of your allowable spaces (including hallways) to have children in and divide it by 35. That will be your occupancy #. So even if you can be licensed for 12 children at one time, the fire marshal might say your occupancy to have a smaller space. (In that scenario you would only be allowed to have 10 children per class. That is unusual, though, as most people have enough square feet for 12 children at one time.) You can start a preschool in an apartment, but you will need at least two exits. One of the exits can be the stairs that lead to the ground floor, and the second should be either an egress window or a door leading outside. Ask your licensing department may take a while to get hold of, so it is best to start the process as early in your preschool journey as possible. Also, the phone system might take a bit of time to get you to the right person. Once you do, ask all your questions again. You might get different answers. Try to clarify, if needed, so you get to the bottom of it. The reason for this discrepancy is because most licensors don't deal with us preschool folk; they're used to daycare only questions. Typically, each state has varying levels of licenses at all, or you may need a certification, or you may need a state license. You'll find that there are even different classifications of childcare licenses, from "family daycare home", to "group daycare facility", to "daycare center", etc. Your own state may have different names for their classifications as well. If you have any young children who will be at home with you during preschool (and not at school), you'll definitely want to find out if they count towards the total number of children you can care for at one time. Some states include your children ages 3-5. Every state is incredibly different in the amount of educational background or training they require a minimum of 20 hours of early childhood education beyond high school, while other states, if not all, require wou to be CPR/1st Aid Certified. So, double-check your state's requirements and find out how long it will take to fulfill them. Two types of inspections you may need are: Health inspection from the state Health Department If your home has been built recently or is in good condition, you should have almost no problems with these inspections. Most likely they will make sure that you have a fire extinguisher, smoke detectors, adequate exits, a functional telephone (or cell phone), and that you will get copies of the child's immunization records. Be sure to tell your health inspector that you will not be preparing food for the children (you can have the preschool parents sign up to bring snacks and this will keep your costs down.) Most likely you will have to be fingerprinted and have a background check. This is not only for safety purposes, but it also gives you an added qualification when you talk to prospective parents who don't even know you. These are the four most common concerns people have when going through the licensing process. Some have pools in their backyard and don't have security fences around them; others have pets in the home and aren't sure if they can be around them; others have pets in the home and aren't sure if they can be around them; others have pets in their backyard; and still others don't have security fences around them; others have pets in their backyard; and still others don't have 6' fencing around them; others have pets in their backyard and don't have security fences around them; others have pets in the home and aren't sure if they can be around them; others have pets in the home and aren't sure if they can be around them; others have pets in the home and aren't sure if they can be around them; others have pets in the home and aren't sure if they can be around them; others have pets in the home and aren't sure if they can be around them; others have pets in the home and aren't sure if they can be around them; others have pets in the home and aren't sure if they can be around them; others have pets in the home and aren't sure if they can be around them; others have pets in the home and aren't sure if they can be around them; others have pets in the home and aren't sure if they can be around them; others have pets in the home and aren't sure if they can be around the home and aren't sure if they can be around the home and aren't sure if they can be around the home and aren't sure if they can be around the home and aren't sure if they can be around the home and aren't sure if they can be around the home and aren't sure if they can be around the home and aren't sure if they can be around the home and aren't sure if they can be around the home and aren't sure if they can be around the home and aren't sure if they can be around the home and aren't sure if they can be around the home and aren't sure if they can be around the home and aren't sure if they can be around the home and aren't sure if they can be around the home and aren't sure if they can be arou city) is different with their requirements so if your licensor doesn't have an answer, be sure to call the health and fire departments—and even your city's Planning and Zoning Committee—as they may have more information for you. Even if you have already checked with the government agencies mentioned above about a business license, a DBA, and an LLC, ask this question anyway as every state/city is unique and there may be something you need to take care of that we may not have thought of. When a business is operated out of a home, your city may want to make sure that your neighborhood is okay with it. Some things you may need are a business permit, special use permit, meeting with your neighbors, and meeting with the city council. In addition, if you have a homeowner's association (HOA), they may have rules regarding the posting of business signs, increased traffic through the subdivision, or even how you use your home. Tip for dealing with any of these people: BE NICE and always talk about how a preschool in the neighborhood will benefit the community. Also, map out the pickup/dropoff procedures for your preschool, as they will often ask for those. (NOTE: Most homes can be licensed, and most HOAs allow daycares, so you shouldn't have any problem getting approved.) Again, every state will have different fees, but here are approximate fees: Varies: Daycare License (from the state) Varies: Special Use Permit (from your city) $35: Health Inspection $50: Ere Ins documentation from the other agencies, or it may take longer depending on the number of applications they're working on. The good news is that you can submit your licensing application, and any other appointments NOW and then the results will be submitted to your licensor as soon as they're completed. That should help the application process move more quickly because the licensing department won't be waiting on you. And typically, you can market you're just waiting on the actual licensing paperwork to go through.
We have provided a comprehensive list with preschool license information for all 50 states. This list tells you how you can start a preschool without a license for your state. At the end of this section is a list of links that will take you to a Trello board with frequently updated information about your state's licensing requirements. PRESCHOOL LICENSING BY STATE To start a preschool operates solely within one of these criteria: You ONLY teach online preschool ORYou ONLY teach classes for less than
